ABOUT THE ILN

The International Librarians Network (ILN) peer mentoring program is a facilitated program aimed at helping librarians develop international networks. We believe that innovation and inspiration can cross borders, and that spreading our networks beyond our home countries can make us better at what we do.

Participants in the program are matched with others outside their country, based on the information they provide to the program coordinators. Partnerships are made for a fixed term, and during this period the partnerships are supported by regular contact and discussion points led by the program coordinators. Supported partnerships have an end date, however it is our vision that participants would develop a widening network of ongoing, independent professional relationships.

What the library could learn about search

AUGUST 26, 2014 BY RENE MEIJER · 0 COMMENT

I'm not a librarian, or an expert on search. I'm a (re-)searcher who just happens to work in a library. I've tried to benefit from having such expert colleagues by developing my information literacy skills, but I have always had one dirty little secret: I really struggle to get sensible results out of your catalogue and discovery tools. I use the catalogue, but only to find access to a resource I've already found elsewhere.

I will give an example: I'm currently exploring some ideas that link pattern libraries (a design method originating in Architecture) with communicative action (an idea from philosophy and social sciences). I start my research by the search "pattern libraries" "communicative action". When I enter this into the library catalogue, I get 0 results. Nothing in the collection, nothing in articles and databases. I then enter the exact same phrase into Google and I get 2,750 results. Sure the vast majority of links are probably rubbish, but on the first page alone there are several links to academic work that has touched on the topic. The link at the very top is a book. Google has actually scanned the book and found my search terms in the content. Neatly highlighted for me on page 29, exactly what I was looking for. I the copy the title into our library catalogue, and it turns out we even have a copy of the book, it's in my bag right now. This is how I search (and find), and I recon I am not alone.

The reality is that there simply is no way to compete with the resources and expertise that a company like Google have. This isn't just about dealing with student habits and preferences, it is the realisation that the sheer idea that we could make or buy any system that is going to outsearch Google is really just quite naive.

Facilities will include:

- open, secure 24/7 - and fully accessible for all students and staff
- dynamic on-demand loanable collection
- supported by an expanding rich digital collection, with a core print reference collection
- wifi and power throughout
- desktop PCs and laptop loans
- printers, scanners and copiers
